

India, Israel, US experts try to develop drug to treat rare disease

PTI / New Delhi

Researchers at the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT), Madras, Tel Aviv University and Columbia University are studying a rare genetic brain disease called "GNBI Encephalopathy" and trying to develop a drug to treat it effectively.

probably much greater as diagnosis is not widely available since it requires a sophisticated and expensive procedure," Reddy said from Israel, where she is conducting the research. "Every cell in the human body has a wide variety of signalling molecules and pathways that help in communicating with other cells and within itself. The major signalling mechanism used by cells is 'G-Protein Coupled Receptor' (GPCR) signalling," she added.

The GPCR is a receptor that receives a signal (e.g. a hormone, light, neurotransmitter) from the outside of the cell and transduces it to the inside of the cell.

"GPCR is present in the cell membrane and has a G-protein (αβ) attached to it from inside the cell. G-proteins are the immediate downstream molecules that relay the signal received by the GPCR. These G-proteins are present in every cell, and any malfunction will cause disease," she explained.

Mutations in GNBI gene cause the neurological disorder (GNBI Encephalopathy) characterised by general developmental delay, epileptiform activity in the electroencephalogram (EEG) and seizures of several types, muscle hypotonia or hypertonia, and additional variable symptoms, are seen in the patients.

With less than 100 documented cases worldwide, GNBI Encephalopathy is a kind of neurological disorder which affects individuals in the foetus stage.

Scientists say delayed physical and mental development, intellectual disabilities, frequent epileptic seizures, are among the early symptoms of the disease and since genome sequencing is an expensive procedure, not many parents opt for it early on.

According to Haritha Reddy, a former PhD scholar at IIT Madras, a single nucleotide mutation in the GNBI gene that makes one of the G-proteins, the "Gβ1 protein", causes this disease.

"This mutation affects the patient since they are a foetus. Children born with GNBI mutation experience mental and physical developmental delay, epilepsy (abnormal brain activity), movement problems. To date, less than a hundred cases have been documented worldwide.

"However, the actual number of affected children is
